

layered into this bill. It turns out Senator JOHANNIS did such an outstanding job of raising awareness about the 1099 requirement that our friends on the other side have basically co-opted the idea and are now claiming it as their own. Actually, that is fine with us. It is not a bad precedent, actually. We have a lot of other good ideas we would be happy to share—not replacing one 2,700-page bill with another but passing commonsense reforms that people actually want.

The case against this bill is more compelling every day. Everything we learn tells us it was a bad idea, that it should be repealed and replaced. The courts say so, the American people say so, job creators say so. It is time for those who passed this bill to show they noticed. Let's take this opportunity.

I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Madam President, following my remarks, Senator PAUL of Kentucky will be recognized for up to 20 minutes in morning business to deliver his first speech as a Member of the Senate. Following Senator PAUL's remarks, the Senate will resume consideration of S. 223, the Federal Aviation Administration Authorization bill. I have spoken to the Republican leader, and we will have some votes between 5 and 6 o'clock tonight. We will have three votes. Senators will be notified as to the specific time at a later hour today.

HEALTH CARE

Mr. REID. Madam President, if the American people want to understand the difference between Democrats and Republicans, it is my suggestion that they pay attention to what is happening on the Senate floor this week. The two parties simply have different priorities. Democrats are fighting to modernize our Nation's air travel. Republicans are fighting to repeal the health care reform law, ignoring the 80 percent of Americans who want them to leave it alone. In other words, Democrats want to get passengers the rights they deserve. Republicans want to take away patients' rights that they already have, rights that are saving lives, saving money, and saving Medicare, just as we promised when we wrote this law.

What Republicans refuse to understand, or at least what they hope the people do not realize, is that in America we give our citizens rights; we don't take them away. That principle comes first and inspired the country's founding and has directed our evolution and defines our promise.

We as Senators have a choice. We can move forward or we can look backward; we can make progress or we can stage a futile fight with the future. It is clear this week that while the American people and Senate Democrats are looking ahead, Senate Republicans are looking for a way to distract the American people. This is what moving forward looks like: Our bill to modernize our Nation's air travel will protect consumers. It is a passengers' bill of rights. We know delays happen when we fly from the airports around the country. We try to fly sometimes. When we do, we want to make sure passengers are treated right. We want to make sure passengers have the right to timely and accurate information about their flight. We want to make sure passengers have the right to food, water, and access to restrooms when they are forced to wait.

We want to make sure passengers have the right to know that while they are sitting on an airplane that is on a tarmac—as I said here yesterday, 3½ hours in Dallas alone waiting for a gate—we want to make sure passengers know the airline they are flying has a contingency plan to get them where they need to go.

This bill will also make flying safer and make it more efficient. It will help prevent accidents on the runways. It will finally introduce GPS technology to our Nation's air traffic control system. Mongolia has GPS. We don't. In most every country in the world, they determine where airplanes are with GPS. They do it in the air. We are still doing it on the ground. This bill will improve access to rural communities, which is important to Nevadans in rural cities such as Ely, NV, which is not near a big metropolitan area, and would reduce delays in the first place. That is what moving forward looks like, and that is why Senator ROCKEFELLER has worked for years to get this bill passed.

But there have been little side issues that have come up. The side issues are going to be debated on the floor and we will either pass them or get rid of them and get this bill on the road to the President's desk. So what I have talked about is what moving forward looks like. That is what we Democrats want to do.

This is what moving backward would look like: Republicans' symbolic effort to repeal the rights in the health care reform bill would put us all at risk. I am going to only mention a few of the things, but it would let insurance companies, once again, stand in the way of a child and the medical care that child needs. It would take away that child's right to get health insurance and instead give insurance companies the right to use asthma or diabetes as the excuse to take away that care. It would kick kids off their parents' health insurance. It would take away seniors' rights to a free wellness check. It would force seniors to pay more for their prescriptions. It would raise taxes on small businesses and add $1.5 trillion to our deficit.

That is what their amendment would do.

This is how health insurance worked before reforms became the law of the land. We do not want to go back. Madam President, I am sure you have had parents come to you with tears in their eyes, saying: Now my child can get insurance. We don't want to have mothers say: What am I going to do? That is what they said in the past.

There is one more difference between Democrats and Republicans. We are fighting for jobs this week. Along with all the advantages in the aviation modernization bill I mentioned a minute ago, it is also a jobs bill. It will create and protect at least 280,000 American jobs. That is why we are fighting so hard for this bill. This is a bipartisan bill. Let's get to passing it.

While the health care reform law is making sick Americans healthier and better, it is also helping unemployed Americans find work. A healthier health care system is going to create hundreds of thousands of jobs a year for the next decade.

I went to GW University Hospital—I wasn't sick—to visit somebody there. A woman—she must have been one of the administrators—said: Oh, I am so happy. She said: You know that health care bill you passed, we are going to hire 500 new physicians. I came back and told my staff that and they said you must have it mixed up. Five hundred? I said: Let's find out her name and you call her. They called her. I was right. That is what she told me, and she said that is because of the health care bill we passed.

We are talking about this health care bill also helping unemployed Americans find work. A healthier health care system is going to create hundreds of thousands of jobs a year for the next decade. That is what they tell us. That is because when businesses do not have to spend much on premiums, they can spend more on people—and healthier workers are, of course, more productive workers and that helps our economy at every level.

This is the difference between moving forward and moving backward. It is the difference between giving people rights and taking them away. In the late days of the health care reform debate, my colleagues on the other side asked us to stop everything and start over. It is nothing more than an excuse to keep insurance companies in charge of health care in this country. The minority is again asking us to turn back the clock on the progress we made, turn health care back to the insurance companies. They can dig in their heels, try to slam on the brakes as hard as they want, but the course of our country goes in only one direction. We move forward.

Madam President, as I announced earlier, Senator PAUL is going to give his maiden speech. I am sure his father is looking on through the magic of all of the new communications we have to listen to his son give a speech in the Senate. We are all anxious to hear him.
